By Judith Miller

New York Times Service WASHINGTON --- A report to the Nuclear Regularory Commis-sion has concluded that the international system of safeguards in-tended to stop the diversion of uranium and plntonium from peaceful nuclear programs to atomic weap-ons bas gross deficiencies.

The report, prepared by a for-mer commission staff member and mer commission start memoer and international inspector, concludes that the International Atomic En-ergy Agency, the Vienna-based or-ganization that monitors ouclear material, is "incapable of detecting the diversion of a significant quan-tity" of nuclear fuel "in any state with a moderate to large nuclear energy establishment." While the international agency's monitoring has increasingly come under attack by legislators and other critics, the 21-page report was described by an official as the first negative assessment of the entire safeguards system prepared for a U.S. government agency. A State Department official who had not seen the report issued the following statement on Fridays We recognize that the safeguards system is oot perfect. However, in-ternational safeguards are essential for nonproliferation efforts, essential to continue nuclear commerce, and effective for most kinds of facilities. There is simply no alternative to the international safeguards regime. And we are working hard to improve that system."

Another State Department official described the report, which has not been made public, as the work of one disgruntled former international inspector," and emphasized that it did not reflect the administration's views.

Nevertheless, the regulatory commission sent the report, accompanied hy an 18-page staff commentary, to several House and Senate committees Friday evening. The commission's commentary concludes that the report provides some new details about problems that the commission has been aware of for some time. The com-mission told Congress that it would attempt to determine whether the problems still exist, it said the difficulties could "seriously" affect the international agency's effectiveness. The five-member regulatory commission, motivated in part by the report, considered at a closed-toor meeting on Nov. 4 whether it should make a determination on the effectiveness of the system of safeguards before licensing new ouclear exports. No decision was made, according to a participant.

Administration officials are concerned because the international agency's safeguards are a vital ele-ment in President Reagan's policy against the spread of nuclear weapons as well as his efforts to nuclear exports and restore the United States as a "reliable supplier" of atomic technology. The report, known as the Morgan memorandum after its author, Emanuel R. Morgan, was ordered hy Victor Gilinsky, an NRC com-missioner. Mr. Gilinsky declined to comment on the report or the commission deliberations. Officials familiar with his motives said his concern about the adequacy of international safe-guards had been heightened by Israel's raid in June on an Iraqi nu-clear reactor under international safeguards, by congressional testimony in July about the failings of the system by a former inspector for the agency, and by other indi-cations of political and technical problems at the international agency, which has 111 members. Mr. Morgan, who could not be by an apartment manager. Mr. Holden apparently died of natural causes, said a police sergeant, and had apparently been dead "for some time, possibly two or three days."

Best-Actor Nominations

The Illinois-born actor was perhaps best known for his performances in the motion pictures "Sunset Boulevard" and "Network," for which he won best-actor nominations in 1950 and 1976 respectively, and in "Love Is a Muny Splendored Thing" and Picnic.

The actor had not been reported in poor health, although he was said by his butler to be not looking or feeling well when he left his permanent home in Palm Springs. Calif., last week. Last year there were reports Mr. Holden was going to West Germany to consult with a Dr. Hans Nieper, a cancer specialist. But Dr. Nieper said at the time that he did not believe Mr. Holden was seriously ill.

In Washington, President Reagan expressed his "shock" and "great sense of personal loss" over Mr. Holden's death. The actor had been the best man at Mr. Reagan's wedding to Nancy Davis.

Deputy press secretary Larry Speakes said Mr. Reagan had a close relationship with Mr. Hol-den. "I was shocked, of course." Mr. Speakes quoted the president as saying. "I have a great feeling of grief. ... Our friendship never waned."

Mr. Holden, whose real name was William Franklin Beedle, gained stardom playing the prizelighter in the 1939 movie, "Golden Boy."

In addition to his acting roles, he was a conservationist in Africa and Asia who founded the famed Mount Kenya Safari Club.

French Communists Timidly Assess Electoral Failure

By Edward Cody Washington Past Service

PARIS - The French Communist Party, after a dramatic setback in last spring's presidential and parliamentary elections. has opened a timid public debate on what went wrong.

While the party is taking pains to avoid placing direct blame on the party leadership. Communist dissidents say the public debate represents the up of a titame iceberg of disappointment, much of it directed at the party leader, Georges Marchais, and his aides.

These dissidents hold Mr. Marchais pro-Soviet leadership responsible for the disastrous electoral results. In allowing a little steam out to reduce pressure, Mr. Marchais and his team hope to contain the dissatisfaction among the faithful and prevent it from turning against their stewardship of party fortunes during stocktaking at the 24th party congress in February, the dissidents say. And even though Mr. Marchais' opponents predict that he probably will succeed, the tone of the coming congress will strongly affect party attitudes toward cooperation with President Francois Mitterrand's ruling Socialists and continued Communist participation in his govern-. nieni.

'Backs to the Wall'

"They have to get by the congress," said a party official critical of Mr. Marchais. The leaders have their backs to the wall. If they really let the militants debate the defeat, the dehate will necessarily be critical of their leadership in the last few

The rumhling in the ranks grows in part #### from significant electoral reverses, including Mr. Marchais' poor sbowing in the presidential election last May and a drop from 86 Communist deputies in the National Assembly to 43 after last June's legislative elections.

The showing, representing a loss of about one million traditional voters, marked the worst defeat since the party was founded 60 years ago. It reflected what one dissident called "a profound political crisis" during which the estimated membership has dropped to 500,000 from 700.000 several years agr and the estimat-ed circulation of the official party newspa-

In addition, Communist sources say, militants have been confused by a party stand holding that it was impossible to work out a common plauform with the Socialists during the election campaign, but that it is good politics for the four Communist ministers to join in applying the Socialist platform,

"The coherence [of party policy] is being questioned," said the dissident party official. "This is not policy. They cannot make a policy because there is a hig argument going on inside the party." Against this background, the party published a long draft resolution for Fehruary's congress. It explains the setback at the polls as the result of "strategic lateness" in marrying party doctrine with modern times. But the resolution, which Mr. Marchais describes as the basis of a "big debate," steers carefully away from major decisions since Mr. Marchais took over in December, 1972.

Chief among them - and, according to dissidents, a prime reason for last spring's defeat - was the break with Mr. Mitterrand's Socialist Party during he campaign for 1978 legislative elections. Before the hreak, opinion polla had given the "unico of the helt," which included Communists, Socialisis and a small center-left party, a good chance of winning a parliamentary majority. As it turned out, forces loyal to Valery Giscard d'Estaing, then the presi-dent, stayed in power with a comfortable edge.

Since then, Mr. Mitterrand gained strength largely by increasing his support among civil servants, young executives and others who had refused to accept his party while it was allied with the Communists. The Communists, as rivals to the left of the Socialists, had little chance of winning those votes, and in fact ended up losing about a fourth of their own traditional electorate to Mr. Mitterrand's bandwagon.

"With its 24th congress, [the French Communist Party] has the will to look elearly at the reasons for its setback, ... to point out all the consequences and all the implications of its last two congresses and to deepen reflection on the political practices that will permit them to be put to work," the draft resolution says in an introduction.

The document blames historical errors rather than Mr. Marchais' tactics, however, citing slowness by the leadership of Maurice Thorez and Waldeck Rochet, Mr. Marchais' predecessors, in jetusoning doctrine such as dictatorship of the proletariat long after it was out of step with the times in France.

"When we look back on the last quarter-century, we must agree that our party waited too long to commit itself to exploration of ways to reach Socialism, and even of forms of Socialism, that are ap-propriate for the France of loday," the draft resolution says.

Newspaper Forum

Since the resolution was published. L'Humanité has begun a regular "discussion tribune," printing contributions from Communist militants on the resolution and adding their own explanations for the reversals. Most adhere carefully to the resolution, reaching back into history and avoiding Mr. Marchais break with Mr. Mitterrand.

Georges Poincon, a militant from the Paris suburbs, wrote, however, that the resolution skipped too lightly over party strategy of the last several years.

"While it is always useful to analyze what happened in the last decades ... it seems to me at least necessary to analyze profoundly what happened in a more re-cent period," he wrote. Mr. Poincon tonk care, however, to avoid mentioning Mr. Marchais or his break with Mr. Mitterrand. Despite what he called "fundamental disapproval," he also avoided criing Mr. Marchais' expulsion of a group of

Communists who opposed the break. "In simple terms," said the independent lefust newspaper Liberation. "if they do not want their prose to land in the wastepaper hasket. Communist militants must carefully stay away from two taboo subjects: the leadership's policies since the break-up of the leftist union and the internal strains caused by exclusion of [the dissidents]."

"In such conditions, the very founding of independent organizations such as Solidarity and NZS created conflicts." Mr. Smyk said. Mr. Hebda once kicked out of a

The incident was confirmed by a special commission representing the rectors of four other universities which went to Radom to investigate the situation late last month. The Solidarity chapter at the school, which represents 490 of its 1,100 academic, administrative, and service employees, appealed unsuccessfully to the Ministry of Education as long ago as last April to recall Mr. Hebda as incompetent. It also accused him of repressions against employees for church activities and of favoritism. The special commission, however, reported that it could find no evidence of wrongdoing. It conctheless blamed his autocratic style for the crisis and for the requests for transfer submitted by eight

Several blocks away, a smaller group of Hebda supporters has or-ganized its own "anti-strike" sit-in at another building associated with the college. SACRAMENTO - A state board voted unanimously Monday to reconsider its decision to grant a 1984 parole date to Sirhan B. Sirhan convicted of the 1968 assassination of Sen. Robert F. Kennedy. A final decision on parole will be made at a yet-unscheduled hearing by a state nanel. The Board of Prison Terms acted at the request of the Los Angeles district attorney, who said he had information that Sirhan had threat-ened to harm Mr, Kennedy's brother, Sca. Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts. Sirhan has denied the allegation.

Meanwhile, James H. Department investigation, a preliminary inquiry aimed at deter-mining whether there should be a special prosecutor, White House officials are declining public com-ment on the details. Sources familiar with the investigation said it. was nearly completed.

[In Tokyo, the editor of the mag-azine said Monday he had decided to give $1,000 as an "expression of statude" for the interview with Nancy Reagan, United Press Joter-national reported. The payments are customary with Japanese magazines.

[Tsugio Takamori, executive editor of Shufunotomo (The Housewife's Companioo), said he had not expected the money to still be in Mr. Allen's possession eight months after the Jan. 21 interview. ["Clearly I was surprised when I learned last week that the money was still with Mr. Allen," Mr. Takamori said in an interview. He said money was given "as an ex-pression of gratitude" for the interview and that he expected it to go to charity.]

Position May Change

Administration officials said Sunday that Mr. Reagan would continue to support Mr. Allen in public statements but cautioned that his support was based on what was now known, Mr. Reagan's statement was something less than a full declaration of support, hnt it was deemed appropriate by his advisers because of the delicate nature of the investigation, officials said.

It was learned Sunday that Fred F. Fielding, the White House counsel, had talked to Attorney. General William French Smith about the status of the Allen case. But an administration official said they had not discussed the substance of the case.

Mr. Allen said Sunday he regarded the matter as overblown. hut he declined to answer questions about various aspects of it.

The investigation is into the cir-cumstances relating to Mr. Allen's receipt of the money. Mr. Allen said the cash was not a bribe but an "honorarium" not intended for him. He said he put the cash in a safe in his office and forgot about it after he moved out of that office. After the cash was discovered in mid-September by a secretary on Mr. Allen's staff, the White House said, the FBI was called in. The bureau requested the cooperation of Japanese authorities, and the investigation was disclosed last week in Japan.

Allen Deniai

Mr. Allen has denied any sug-gestion that he solicited the cash payment at any time. He said he received the "initial request" for the interview from the wife of a friend and that he did not arrange the interview but forwarded the request to others.

Sources close in the Justice Department investigation said no one has specifically alleged that Mr. Allen took a bribe and that interviews conducted in Japan and Washington corroborated his ac-COURL

But Mr. Allen's position as se-curity adviser was said hy adminis-tration officials to be potentially jeopardized by the investigation if there was widespread criticism of his behavior in Congress or by the public.

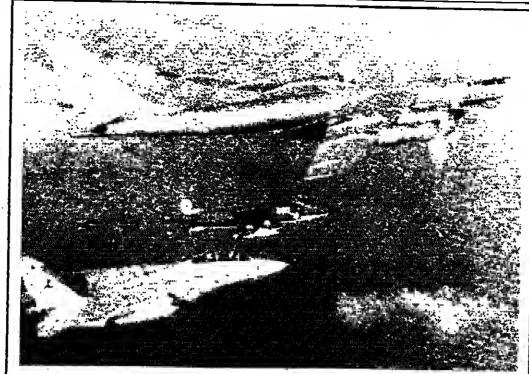

Reagan aides supported Mr. Al-len in the past when it was report-ed that he was involved in financial irregularities. An official mvolved in the presidential cam-paign last year said Edwin Meese 3d, the White House counselor, was the staff member most reluc-tant to permit Mr. Allen to resign after The Wall Street Journal reported that Mr. Allen had used a position in the Nixon administration to benefit financially. Mr. Allen took a leave of absence from the campaign after the Journal article appeared hut rejoined the Reagan staff after the election

Meeting Forgotten

Mrs. Reagan said through a White House official that she knew "absolutely nothing" about the payment. The official, Sheila Tate, said Mrs. Reagan "doesn't even remember meeting them."

But in a recent series of interviews, the FBI's foreign-counterintelligence experts in New York described some of their methods of operation, their efforts in stymic espionage by other countries and the importance of New York City is a spying center.

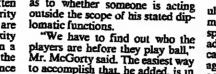

While FBI accounts of intellience activities cannot be substantiated in most respects because of their secret nature, the agency's descriptions offer a revealing look at what it says are its activities in intelligence-gathering. According to Donald J. McGor-ty, the special agent in charge of the bureau's Sino-Satellite foreigncounterintelligence section which focuses on every country hut the Soviet Union - New York is actually the "largest base for for-eign intelligence-gathering," "New York is the huh," he said.

There are many more diplomats here than anywhere else - even Washington. Even countries with whom we do not have diplomatic relations and who have no embassies have missions at the United Nations. And anyplace these people have establishments, there's an opportunity for espionage,"

Under guidelines from the attorney general, Mr. McGorty said, the hureau needs no specific information or suspicious move to touch off an investigation of a criteria country's actions, hut it must be able to present "specific and articulable facts" to support arguments for inquiries into concriteria countries.

He declined to name all the target countries, hut said they included Libya and the Communist-bloc countries as well as the Palestine Liberation Organization. He add-ed that more than 2,000 officials of criteria countries either worked or lived in New York City.

R. Jean Gray, the special agent in charge of Soviet counterintelli-gence, said that among more than 600 people the Russians have working in New York, 110 have diplomatic immunity, which extends to their spouses.

Israelis, Citing Experience, Readily Discount Saudi Plan

By David K. Shipler New York Times Service JERUSALEM — The guessing

game surrounding the peace plan of Saudi Arabia's Crown Prince Fahd - would he or would he not recognize Isracl? — has been gen-erating considerable impatience here, mainly because Israelis think they know the answer very well.

Optimism comes hard to a country besieged, vilified and repeatedly attacked by hostile neighbors over the decades. The impulse is to hear the Arah voices of extremism and to dismiss those of moderation, to see radicalism as reality and conciliation as duplicity.

Israel has long experience in watching Arab leaders flirt with moderate positions, then skip away. Now and then, Yasser Arafat and others in the Palestine Liberation Organization have been reported as indicating their willigness to leave Israel in peace if a Palestinian nation comes into existence next door in the West Bank and Gaza Strip. But after the re-ports are published, the Arabs usually say that they have been misquoted or misunderstood.

That was Prince Fahd's ancuver after an interview with The Washington Post on May 25, 1980, in which he referred to Jews as cousins ("We are all Semites"), expressed support for UN Security Council Resolution 242, which affirms the "sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of every state in the area and their right to live in peace," and offered to bring other Arabs to ne-gotiations if Israel declared its willingness to withdraw from occu-pied lands.

MADRID - The death of a woman who was hospitalized in Salamanca has brought to 195 the number of deaths caused by the consumption in Spain of adulterat-ed cooking oil that was marketed illegally.

The woman died Sunday. Health Ministry officials said Monday that there were still about 700 persons hospitalized with effects from consuming the olive oil, which was treated with industrial raneseed oil.

The officials said that about 2.5 million liters of adulterated cooking oil would be humed Monday in a plant at Ponferrada, near León in central Spain. More than 25 persons have been arrested and are facing trial in the scandal, which surfaced last May.

Mr. Cruz, who opposed the dictatorship of Anastasio Somoza from exile in Washington, returned to Nicaragua after the Sandinista victory, first as president of the Central Bank and then as a mem-ber of the ruling junta. Disillusion-ed and drained, he left the junta in March to become ambassador temporarily in an attempt to improve the already tense relations between Managua and Washington.

He has told friends in recent weeks that he has been frustrated both by the critical attitude toward Nicaragua expressed by U.S. offi-cials and the Sandinista government's crackdown on dissent.

At a press conference Saturday and a relaxed interview Sunday morning, Mr. Cruz made it clear that while he disagrees with much Sandinista policy, he will do everything in his power to support this government rather than see it fall because of U.S. pressure or violent internal opposition.

In recent months the Sandinistas cracked down on dissent from every quarter, shutting an opposition oewspaper for days at a time, community and among "peace groups," a national movement is coalescing around the theme that there is now a growing threat of nuclear war. The movement's dimensions appear modest at the moment, but its membership is active, elite and articulate, and already some national politicians are paying it heed. In a country with a notoriously short political attention span, it is a strong candidate to become this year's vogue.

In a sense this movement represents a continuation of the 1980 political campaign by the losers - by guerrilla means. The par-ticipants favor policies associated, sometimes a bit inaccurately, with Jimmy Carter, or at least with the early Jimmy Carter: limiting the nuclear arms buildup, negotiating restraints on strategic weapons, trying to limit the spread of nuclear arms and raising the nuclear threshold in war planning. Ronald Reagan is associated, sometimes a bit inaccurately, with contrary policies, and he is the target of many of the movement's alarms.

It would be wrong, however, to regard the movement simply as the Democratic left in disguise. To ask whether the actual threat of nuclear war is growing introduces a series of debates that we shall sidestep here. But there is in the country a palpable and measurable increase in the level of anxiety about nuclear war. It arises basically from the collapse of the grand détente experiment of the 1960s

On American campuses, in the scientific and 1970s: The promise of superpower restraint in both political competition and arms-building competition has not been adequately borne out. In such circumstances, concern about the threat of war, far from appearing farfetched or "emotional," takes on a certain prudent edge.

There is, nonetheless, an off-putting note in the tone of too much of the discourse coming out of the nuclear protest movement. It expresses itself in assumptions, and sometimes in explicit allegations, that President Reagan is little more than a nuclear simpleton. This is, of course, nonsense. His policies can be criticized; we have criticized some of them, and will no doubt continue to do so. But it is no fairer to look on Mr. Reagan as a warmonger than it is to look on the mainstream of the new movement as appeasers. What the protesters can properly call on him to do is to demonstrate a more convincing awareness of the dangers of nuclear war. What he can ask of them is to address what seems to be the central element, not very well articulated, in his own nuclear thinking: the fear that the old familiar mutual deterrence is not safe to rely on any more.

The nuclear movement could yet gain a hearing for a wider range of ideas than are a part of the current official consensus. This is too valuable and necessary an undertaking to spoil by going shrill.

Siberia for the Haitians?

Why is the Reagan administration so intent on giving itself one hotfoot after another concerning the Haitians?

First came an interdiction policy that invites ridicule - boarding little boats from Haiti at sea and asking the ragged passengers to prove they are bona fide refugees. Now President Reagan has announced a new detention policy. Starting in the dead of winter, 5,000 migrants will be detained at Fort Drum, N.Y., near the Canadian border. It has already prompted ugly accusations of racism, and concentration camps in Siberia.

"If we took the same measures against the Mexicans," says Mayor Maurice Ferre of Miami, "it would be a major scandal ... It's obviously a racist approach." Given the climate, a county official in Fort Drum says, "They will have to convert some of the barracks into hospitals because everyone will have pneumonia."

The motive is not racism. The ultimate purpose, in fact, is defensible. But the ways in which the administration is pursuing it look surprisingly crueL

The government should be looking for solutions to the flow of boat people from Haiti. Some of them are bona fide refugees, fleeing unchecked allows them to crowd into line. Thousands of people in other countries who also seek opportunity have applied legally and are patiently waiting their turn. Not to control the Haitian influx risks a backlash against all immigration. Hundreds of thousands of refugees have come recently and people in Florida are bridling. The orderly approach would be to determine, in individual hearings, which Haitians are not valid refugees, and send those home. Court challenges now block that way, so the administration proposes legislation to create a simpler hearing process. That bill, with improvements, is the right long-run remedy. Pending congressional action, the administration could send the Haitians to sites in Texas, Maryland or elsewhere, all less extreme than Fort Drum. But it seems determined to treat them roughly so that they will not want to stay and will get word back to others not to come.

That notion is probably impractical. Potential migrants from poor, rural Haiti are unlikely to hear about Fort Drum's ice and snow, let alone be deterred by it. People willing to risk death will risk frostbite. But anage will get through to everyone else: callousness. THE NEW YORK TIMES.

After the Stockman Storm, More Rough Weather

By Anthony Lewis

BOSTON — In the storm over William Greider's brilliant ar-ticle in The Atlantic Monthly, Washington has been debating the future of David Stockman. The more interesting question is the fu-ture of Ronald Reagan.

The Stockman affair comes at a time when the Reagan magic - his ability to charm journalists and politicians — has begun to wear thin. More and more people are looking past the smile and worrying about the substance of issues. And more and more are asking whether the president is able to deal with substance.

Reagan's performance at his last two press conferences was so uneasy, so uninformed that it jarred that friendly andience. David Broder of The Washington Post wrote in a kindly way that the president might find it easier if he met the press more often. Others suspect that he is simply not will-ing or able to master the hard issues of government. The Economist of London.

which has been supportive of Reagan, says in its current issue that many of his foreign policy comments at the last press conference were "confused or wrong." The evidence of chaos in foreign and domestic policy-making has been so strong lately that solid Republicans are voicing concern. The most devastating recent criticism of the administration was a piece in The Wall Street Journal by a Nixon White House aide, Douglas L. Hallett. He said Reagan's "vague geniality punctu-ated by periodic spectacular ges-tures" could no longer conceal the president's "steadfast refusal" to make essential policy choices. "This administration is very good," Hallett wrote, "at exploit-ing essentially marginal events like the air traffic controllers' strike or the Libyan dogfight episode to ap-pear forceful and committed." But he sees "a failure of synthesis and choice among competing views at the root of virtually every govern-ment policy" on basic problems.

'Least Able'

Hallett said the Reagan victories on the budget and taxes and AWACS "were due to control of the media through careful management of the president's public ap-pearances, domination of the politics of movement and an acute sensitivity to the wheels and levers of Congress." But he said there was so far no administration consensus "on the real weaknesses in our economy" and no "defined national security policy." Nor did Hallett see competence around the president. He said the White House foreign and domestic policy staffs were "widely conced-ed" to be "the least able within memory." He called presidential aides Edwin Meese and Michael Deaver "by-products of the president's own career, with no records of independent accomplishment."

It is this context of growing doubt about Reagan's grip on events that makes the Stockman affair so awkward politically. People are bound to start wondering whether the president understands what his budget director has dra-matically admitted — that the economic miracle be promised does not exist and never will. Wall Street has known for months that "supply-side economics" was a mirage. By now every-body can see that huge tax cuts combined with rapid increases in defense spending are going to pro-duce not a balanced budget and prosperity but big budget deficits, light money, recession and unemployment. If Reagan goes on insisting that he still does believe in his economic program, he will appear either cynical or simpleminded. If he does not — if he admits to himself and the country that the great tax and budget victories of his first year were hollow — then he faces the hard question of what to do about the economy. Stockman has been arging the president to face reality. That means trying to recapture some of the tax revenues lost last summer, by modifying the cuts or imposing new taxes, as many congressional Republicans now want. It means tackling the great remaining areas of extravagance in federal spending, such as farm subsidies and water projects and, especially, the defense budget. But those are Ronald Reagan's sacred cows. Th agree to higher taxes of any kind now, however disguised, would be shattering to his political image as a bold tax-cutter. The reconsider the vast new weapons systems that promise to put such a heavy burden on future budgets would conflict with the basic Reagan campaign theme that W the noise around here, you would think the big question about the United States is militarily weak and must urgently rearm. WASHINGTON — You might look at "The Edu-cation of David Stockman," as recounted by William Greider in The Atlantic Monthly, as a drama in three parts.

Act I opens on an earnest and likable young man of undisputed ability. He is testing his theory of what the world ought to be against the reality of what is.

David Stockman begins his career as OMB direc-tor by asking his agency's forecasting model to tell him what the Reagan economic plan will mean for the federal budget. The model tells him the obvious: The big tax cuts and defense increases that the plan cells for will mean for the plan tells him the obvious. calls for will stimulate the economy - but not nearly enough to close the yawning revenue gap. Stockman fiddles with the model a bit to take ac-count of the "expectational" effect of the plan on inflation and productivity. That helps a little, but huge deficits remain. The deficits are so large that closing them might require dismanting all federal non-defense activities except Social Security, veterans' programs and a few other essentials.

Stockman does not disguise this in his discussions within the administration or in the documents he prespending reductions that total about $50 billion by the next fiscal year. The large additional cuts needed to balance the 1984 budget are shown in the document as "additional savings to be proposed" — later called the "magic asterisks" by Sen. Howard Baker. Everything is clearly labeled. Stockman hopes that the harshness of the future cuts can be softened by curbing defense spending and scaling back the tax cut. He tries, without much success, to get administration agreement to balance the package by closing some tax loopholes and cutting a few subsidies for the well-off.

Stockman's Act II role is less appealing. The selling of the budget and tax packages is in full swing. In the heat of battle over the budget cuts — and the enphoria of greed over the much larger tax cuts w congressmen remember the unsolved problem of the "magic asterisks." Stockman does not remind Congress that, in voting for defense increases and tax cuts, it is also voting for either huge non-defense budget cuts or gigantic deficits. Stockman begins in make deals he knows he can't honor in the future. A new sort of discrepancy creeps into the numbers — one that's much harder to spot. It comes from small changes in what you assume the world would look like if you don't change a policy --and how it would behave if you do; or from putting artificial caps on out-year spending that you know won't be sustainable when the time comes to apply them; or shoving off the full impact of tax cuts into future years. Stockman accuses the other side of gim-mickry, but both sides are fudging.

Also lost in the horse-trading are the remnants of the attempt to balance losses for the poor with some measure of loss to the rich. In Act II the game is all.

As Act III opens, Stockman sees that the budget package has been tainted by the power of special interests. The never-solved problem of the 1984 deficit has been made much worse by the failure of the ill-conceived Social Security cuts. The tax bill is roll-ing toward passage, but it is picking up new and expensive incrustations at every turn. Wall Street is unimpressed, and the economy is softening under the impact of high interest rates. When Stockman's defense-control plan loses ont in the administration, all real hope of balancing the budget is gone. Stockman goes before the House Budget Committee and tells them the bad news — without asterisks. Stockman's behavior is not always admirable but it is always understandable — at least to anyone who has played the policy game. Through it all, Greider notes, "Stockman kept asking and answering the right questions." Maybe not soon enough, maybe not loudly enough, but the right questions - which still need better answers. What is sullied by the story is not the integrity of David Stockman, but the reputaman gave the impression that he was telling the trath about his criti-cism of Reagan's budget. And of the two, telling the truth about what's going on around . Washington is usually more dan-gerous to the president than mis. ALL IBIT placing what happened to a mere , thousand dollars.

Nothing fascinates Washington more than these personal slips and tangles. They are revealing in some ways, and provide arguments for "the opposition in the coming elso tion year, but they also divert attention from the major questions! of public policy.

For example, an important event took place in Washington during the uproar over Stockman and Allen that was largely ignored. The president finally presided over a meeting of his National Security -Council on Thursday morning to discuss and to sign the U.S. negoti-ating position with the Soviet Union on the control of nuclear weapons. This is obviously the central question of world politics, because the burden of the arms race, now costing the nations more than $800 billion a year, is aggravating the economy of all nations.

So the main news is not really Stockman and Allen, but that the Reagan administration is finally Reagan administration is finally and reloctantly going through a major reappraisal of both its eco-nomic and foreign policies. On do-mestic policy, Stockman has chal-lenged the assumptions of the eco-nomic supply-siders. On foreign policy, Secretary of State Haig has carefully begun to challenge the as-sumptions of Reagan's military hard-liners and cold warriors.

Haig said some interesting things in his testimony before the House Foreign Relations Commit-tee the other day. He spoke after talking in New York to Andrei -Gromyko, the Soviet foreign minister, for nine hours. For the first time, he seemed to strike a balance . between his emphasis on military ... arms and his desire for peace.

"The United States wants a con--structive relationship with the So-viet Union," he said. "Such a rela-tionship must be based on a secure military balance, respect for the independence of others, restraint in the use of force, and reciprocity : in the making and fulfilling of agreements."

The Soviets

Haig added: "The Soviets have . deployed over 750 warheads on their SS-20s threatening Europe. while NATO has not yet deployed one of its planned 572 missiles. Despite this revealing fact, well-meaning people want to know. whether we are serious about nego-. tiating limitations on theater nu-clear forces. The answer is clear, u Of course we are. We want a balanced agreement, one that would. establish equal, global and verifi-, able limits, at the lowest possible level, ideally zero."

This was the theme of the secretary of state's argument for Wash-

Israelis Watching Riyadh

The visit of an Israeli parliamentary delega-tion, sent over to stifle American interest in the Saudi "peace plan," has turned out to be interesting. The group has had sharp words to say about an initiative that Prime Minister Begin had described as a program to "liqui-date Israel by stages." Yet the delegation's chairman, Moshe Arens, described the key Saudi point - acknowledging "the right of the states in the region to live in peace" - as "a step ahead." The Saudis have "gone a little way in our direction," he said, although they still have "a long way to go."

In Israel, meanwhile, a vigorous public examination of the Saudi proposals is being conducted, with some people insisting they are a trap and others asking whether they may not hold some promise. Even as the Israeli Cabinet rejected the proposals last August, Wolf Blitzer recalls in the Jerusalem Post, Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir noted that they contained "an undertone of Saudi recognition of Israel." The energy minister, Yitzhak Berman, called the proposals an "in-teresting development" in that they dispensed with the notion of the "mystical religious character" of the Arab-Israeli dis-pute, leaving it as "a dispute about borders. As such, it can lend itself to solution."

So there is a major opening for the United States to look over the Saudi offer, and to work to improve it, in tandem with Israel. There is nothing to lose and conceivably much to gain in continuing to look to Riyadh. Moshe Arens has it right.

On Investigating Allen

The Japanese magazine to which Nancy Reagan gave a five-minute interview on her first full day in the White House is reported to have presented a $1,000 token of its "gratitude" to White House National Security Adviser Richard V. Allen, who was involved, in a way not yet clarified, in the interview. "Knowing this to be customary in Japan and not wishing to embarrass the Japanese journalist or the first lady," the White House said Friday, "Mr. Allen received the honorarium and gave it to his secretary for safekeeping until he could ascertain the proper procedure for turning it over to the government." The money sat for eight months in a safe in the office Mr. Allen had briefly occupied, and was discovered in September.

An investigation is under way. Whenever cash money in an envelope is passed in the White House, there darned well ought to be an investigation. Even if you accept Mr. Allen's explanation, it seems he should have had the presence of mind - notwithstanding what no doubt was the hectic pace of Jan. 21, 1981 — to comprehend the political dynamite inherent in that sort of transaction. His solicitude for the tender sensibilities of the Japanese might well have been matched by a regard for the proprieties of the Americans, not least his boss.

The investigation is being conducted in the Justice Department. Should it stop there? Under the ethics in government act of 1978, the attorney general must investigate any allegation of illegal activity by a federal official and, if necessary, pass the probe on to a special prosecutor outside his department within 90 days. The circumstances in this case seem to be exactly of the sort that Congress had in mind when it established an investigative procedure outside the Justice Department. THE WASHINGTON POST.

Fetus Surgery Out of Womb Performed by U.S. Doctors

SAN FRANCISCO - A team of loctors at the University of California Medical Center performed major surgery on a human fetus outside its mother's womb and then returned it to the womb. where it survived to full term, doctors have disclosed.

The operation was performed. between four and five months ago on an unidentified woman in San Francisco by Drs. Michael Harri-son, Mitchell S. Golbus and Roy A. Filly. It took place in the 21st week of the pregnancy, which con-tinued to term after the fetus was replaced.

The baby, however, died after birth of undeveloped lungs. The complication was not directly related to the operation, which corrected a severe urinary tract block-age that would have killed the fetus early in the pregnancy.

A bospital spokesman said that doctors have been instructed not to talk to reporters before the official surgical report is published in an unnamed medical journal.

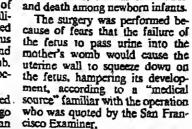

The spokesman confirmed that the surgery had taken place but refused further comment. He said that hospital officials were concerned that the report might not be published in an accredited journal "uneuthorized sources" cause had leaked it to the press. The same doctors performed a successful fetal surgery April 29, inserting a needle through a wom-an's abdomen into the bladder of her unborn baby to correct a blockage of the lower unnary tract.

Possible Ramifications

Earlier attempts at operating on a fetus to correct defects have been unsuccessful because of the threat of miscarriage. Surgery stimulates the uterns to go into labor, and the fetus is pushed out.

New drugs and ultrasound techniques to view the fetus and prevent contractions enabled the recent successful operation. The procedure was hailed as a way to curb birth defects, mental retardation

Doctors believed that distention of the upper utinary tract was so great that providing drainage only from the bladder might not have adequately decompressed the urinary tract, the source said. The procedure, which took one and a half hours, necessitated cutting into the mother's uterine wall and withdrawing the lower half of the fetus, the source said. Incision to allow drainage were made in the flanks of the fetus and in the uter-

Refugees and Remnants of Amin's Army Keep Uganda and Neighbors in Turmoil

By Leon Dash eton Post Servic

KINSHASA, Zaire - Idi Amin has been in exile for more than two years, but the aftereffects of the Ugandan leader's rise and fall have left areas of three nations --- Ugan-da, Zaire and Sudan - in turmoil.

Thousands of soldiers of his defeated army roam the vast forests where the three countries con-verge. The guerrillas ambush security forces and terrorize the local population and the hundreds of thousands of refugees who fled Uganda during and after Marshal Amin's repressive rule.

Religious, tribal and political enmities among the refugees, as well as food shortages and disease, make matters worse.

Tests for Edibility of Mushrooms Can Be Hazardous

444.144

HARDY annual of journalism is the autumn story A on the death toll wreaked on amateur mushroom hunters by perfidious fungi. However, one Italian authority says there are only eight mushrooms capable of causing death, while a French authority reduces this number to five. Neither is a very high proportion of the number of species eaten throughout the world — about 2,000.

Nor are white gills a certain sign that a mushroom is deadly: Fourteen of the species classed by the mushroom encyclopedia of Augusto Rinaldo and Vassili Tyndalo as among our best have white gills, at least when young. This is true of the death cup, the deadly amanita, Amanita phalloides, which is indeed deadly. It is responsible for 90 percent of all deaths from mushroom poisoning. Most of the remaining 10 percent are caused by amanitas too; and yet the mushroom that some connoissenrs would de-scribe as the best in the world, Caesar's mushroom, is Amanita caesarea, a close cousin of the killers. Mushrooms defy all rules.

"Good mushrooms," wrote Eliza Leslie in "Directions for Cookery" (1837), "are only found in clear open fields where the air is pure and unconfined. Those that grow in damp ground, or in shady places, are always poisonous. Mushrooms of the proper sort generally appear in August and September, after a heavy dew or a misty night. They may be known by their being of a pale pink or salmon color on the gills or underside, while the top is of a dull pearl-colored white; and by their growing only in open places. When they are a day old, or a few hours after they are gathered, the reddish color changes to brown. "The poisonous or false mushrooms are of various colors, sometimes of a bright yellow or scarlet all over; sometimes entirely of a chalky white, stalk, top and gills." Corroborative evidence was supplied by Celestine Enstis, in "Cooking in Old Creole Days" (1904):

"Only gather mushrooms in open fields where cows or sheep have pastured, and those that are pink underneath, and as they grow old and large, dark brown underneath. They are all rather fat and stocky. Alongside of them grow cream-colored or white poisonous ones which smell rank. Do not touch them. Confine yourself to the pink and brown only and you are safe."

Memorize these instructions carefully, tuck the handle of a mushroom basket over your arm, and head for the fields - stopping on the way to be measured for a coffin.

Eliza Leslie, however, prepared a line of retreat in case of doubt about the mushrooms gathered: "If you boil an onion among mushrooms, the onion will turn of a bhish black when there is a bad one among them. Of course, the whole should then be thrown into the fire. If in stirring mushrooms, the color of the silver spoon is changed, it is also most prudent to destroy them all."

Folkloric Advice

These conscientious guides have passed on to us only a lew items from the voluminous folklore of mushrooms. We are told, among other things that:

A mushroom is poisonous if (1) it has a bitter, acrid or pungent odor; if (2) it changes color when cut open; if (3) a milky juice oozes from it when it is cut or broken; if (4) it is sticky; if (5) it grows on dead trees, rotting stumps, rotting wood debris, decaying straw or manure; if (6) it grows in the shade; if (7) it grows on damp ground; if (8) it is purple; or if (9) it is green, an indication that tran-scends the category of folklore, since it was formulated in "The Canon of Medicine" of the Persian physician-phi-losopher Abu-Ali al-Husain ibn Abdullah ibn Sina (980-1037), Avicenna for short,

A mushroom ordinarily edible becomes poisonous in the proximity of (10) vipers, (11) toads, or (12) poisonous plants.

If you pick a poisonous mushroom, you can detect its presence if (13) it turns dark in heavily salted water; if (14) it makes vinegar look milky; if (15) it discolors, cooked with it, a silver spoon, a gold ring, a piece of tin, a piece of iron, an onion, garlie or breadcrumbs.

If one of these telltale signs turns up you can render the mushroom harmless by (16) boiling it lengthily, or (17) drying it.

A mushroom is edible if (18) it appears early in the spring; if (19) it appears late in the fall; if (20) it smells like flour; if (21) it is hard to peel; if (22) it grows in the open; if (23) it grows on live trees; if (24) it is a dull pearlgray on top with pink underparts; if (25) it has been mibbled by wild animals or birds; if (26) it can be eaten safely by cats or dogs (this suggests a willingness to dispense with the family pet, or perhaps that of your neighbor in the interest of gastronomic research) or if (27) t has been wibbled at by snails.

Finally (28) snails can eat poisonous mushrooms with

Here you have 28 statements about the edibility of mushrooms. If you want to amuse yourself on a dull evening (it would have to be, I should think, a very doll evening, with the television out of order) you might make the experiment of asking any friends who happen to be present how many of them they think are right and how many wrong. The answer is simple: they are all wrong. One mushroom that would satisfy most of the tests for edibility is the deadly amanita.

There are many anomalies in the world of mushrooms. One curious fact is that if a box turtle cats a toxic mushroom and you then eat the turtle, you will be poisoned; but if a hare eats the same sort of mushroom and you then eat the hare, you will not be poisoned. There is something in the hare's chemistry that neutralizes the poison; the turtle, unaffected itself, passes it on, a sort of Typboid Mary, or Mushroom Mary, among animals. Again, the black ink mushroom, Coprinus stramentarsus, is edible when young; but if you est it shortly after having imbibed an alcoholic drink, or if you take a drink shortly after eating it, it will not kill you, but it may make, you quite sick. Why? Because it contains a toxin that is not soluble in gastric juices, but is soluble in alcohol.

Though it is not generally true that poisonous mush-rooms can be rendered harmless by cooking them, there some exceptions, for instance Rhodop callus mudus (which is violet, but only mildly toxic) and many mushrooms of the genera Lactaria and Russula, safe if well cooked, but toxic when raw. Some of these warn the prospective eater of danger by a disagreeable bitter or acrid flavor that disappears with cooking (or with fermenta-tion, a method often used in eastern Europe to make such mooms palatable). This is the case even with Lactormus ius rufus, of which it has been written that when raw it has a taste that can only be described as a very hor fire."

Alas, mistakes are easy to make, even for those well acquainted with mushrooms. Many of them are altered in color, scent, taste and even shape with changes in latitude, altitude or by being associated with different host plants, which makes them difficult to recognize. The ba-sic fact is that if you don't know mushrooms well, you shouldn't be collecting them at all. The under-train overconfident mushroom hunter is taking a grave risk. As an anonymous writer in The New Yorker put it:

"Exact botanical identification, as many a mushroom bunter has murmured with his last breath, is always a problem . . . The spasm one feels after a mistake about one of the mushrooms in the genus Amanita . . . is apt. to prove acute, excruciating and conclusive." ©1981 Waveley Rest

Contrasts are necessarily heightened for someone in a double nocity position. Which gets back to the revelation. "When I first came to America, I wasn't aware of being different. I had also played jazz in Japan, my breakfast there had also been toast and coffee, 1 had my own trio there and played with American musicians because they were the best players. "But after four or five years 1began to learn about America, how the different ethnic communities' function. In New York I began feeling resentment, but I couldn't figure out if it was because I was Japanese or a woman. The whole

International' Train

The Blue Train, unlike most trains of the South African Railways, is "international," South African bureaucratese for multiracial. It takes passengers of any race, as long as they can afford the fare (about $180 one way). Rail officials say they run the train at a loss, but will continue to do so because it is a tourist attraction and "a prestige train." Its history began in the 1920s when the steam-powered Union Express paffed uphill form. Inside, soft carpets, soothing piped-in stam-powered Union Express puffed upbill music and a complimentary half-bottle of from Cape Town to Johannesburg and the Union Limited made the return trip. But those were ordinary coaches.

Twelve blue luxury coaches were imported from Britain in 1939 but had to be mothballed during the war. In 1946, they were officially baptized the Blue Train and put into service. Today's Blue Train was made in South Africa, replacing the imported one in 1972. It makes two trips a week in winter months and three during South Africa's warm season, between November and April. Southbound, the Blue Train starts from Pretoria and stops first in Johannesburg, 40 miles away. As it pulls out of Egoli or "city of gold," it passes Johannesburg's distinctive gold damps - huge, ziggurat-shaped mounds of earth from the gold mines.

Then it heads into the flat, brown countryside, whose wealth lies in huge farms of corn and wheat and deep mines of gold, diamonds and coal. Black laborers in overalls and barefoot schoolchildren stop to wave. Only at one small station in the late afternoon is there a bint of the problems this outwardly tranquil country faces. A freight train beading north toward Pretoria is filled with twisted, bullet-pocked jeeps and armored cars - debris of the distant was South Africa is fighting against black guer-nillas in neighboring Namibia. By nightfall, the smooth 60-mile-an-bour pace has brought the Blue Train into Kimberley, site of the "big hole," the largest diamond mine site in the world.

With the dawn comes the end of the Karoo, the plateau named by the Hotten-tots, then the scenic highpoint, a sight that explains why Dutch and Huguenot settlers who came here 300 years ago stayed.

The Hex River Valley, which is seen at dusk on the northbound Blue Train, is the foyer to South Africa's wine-growing region.

After a short while, the flat-topped Table Mountain heralds the approach of Cape Town, a jewel of a city set between a striking mountain and the chilly southern Atlan-tic. To South Africans, this is the "mother city," because here in 1652 the Dutch entrepreneur and adventurer Jan van Riebeeck inched the white man's sojourn in this laı country with his tiny, seaside settlement.

Sense of History Contributes to the Building of a Modern State

The Economy Gains Despite Tight Budget

Since OMAN began pulling itself out of its isolation and backwardness in 1970, the people have had to face the fact that development on a limited budget is hard work and demands sacrifice. Yet in many ways the hard-ship of development and the need for all sec-tors of the population to play an active role have proved a blessing in the building of a modern state.

Sultan Qaboos bin Said, in a recent inter-view with the London-based Middle East Economic Digest, said: "It must be said that we in Oman have been very lucky. By force of cir-cumstances, our development started later than many others and we have been able to learn from their mistakes. One of these is not to establish buge projects merely for prestige purposes.

On reflection it may be said that Oman was far from lucky, but rather showed the ability to learn from its experiences and solve prob-lems in the most appropriate way rather than import ideas from other states with different problems.

Throughout the first five years of Sultan Qaboos' reign, military spending to cope with the threat of the rebellion in the southern area was taking up to 50 percent of the state bndgct, while at the same time expensive infrastructural development was the only way to remove the causes of the rebellion.

> As though the economic difficulties ensuing from that situation were not enough, the end of the war in 1975, promising a bright start to the First Five-Year Development Plan, was quickly followed by a decline in oil produc-tion. Record production in 1976 allowed the process of importing technology and Western goods for the plan to begin, but by 1977 the financing simply was not available. At the same time, in 1977 and 1978, the price of crude oil exports remained relatively stable as the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries strove to hold back the inlated costs of manufactured goods so vital to their development. Although Oman has never belonged to the oil cartel, its prices follow OPEC's marker levels.

Every state in the Gulf faced difficulties in the middle to late 1970s, badly hit by inflated contracts and largely without the enormous cushion of reserves that is now available. Oman was hit worst of all, and

By Ken Whittingham THE SULTANATE of Oman, with a terri-L tory of about 300,000 square kilometers, is the second-largest state in the Arabian Pen-insula. With an estimated population of 1.5 million, it is also one of the most inhabited regions. A founding member of the newly established ed Gulf Cooperation Council, Oman is very much a part of the Arab Gulf states. Yet for a variety of reasons this vast and varied country, with its malti-ethnic population, is quite dif-ferent from its northern neighbors. One distinct difference between Oman and its neighbors is its long, proud history, which makes it one of the oldest political entities in the region. There is evidence of burnan settlement in the Stone Age, while commercial ac-tivity is known to have existed in the third millennium B.C., long before the recorded set-tlement of Arab tribes from the Yemen region in the second century B.C. The southern prov-ince, Dhofar, was the base of the original civilizations of the Sabeans and the Himyarites. The port of Muscat from the 7th to the 15th centuries was the lannching point for ships spreading the message of Islam as far afield as Africa and China across well-established trade routes recently retraced by British explorer Tim Severin in the Sohar, a replica of the ocean-going boats of the 9th century.

This long civilization has had a major effect on the population of Oman. Despite the hard times that preceded the rule of Sultan Qaboos bin Said, who overthrew his father in 1970 and sought to bring his country out of the dark ages, Omanis of every social class and standing retain a commitment to their bomeland and a deep sense of identity, which is often absent in the more recent political entities of the Gulf.

Guaranteed Continuity

Whereas in some Gulf states the primitive crafts and lifestyles of earlier ages are seen as something to be forgotten in the age of con-crete and computers, the Omani people are happy to preserve and display those facets of life that have guaranteed continuity for the people of the nation in times of prosperity and 7Aπt.

Many of the educated people and traders in modern Oman are those who were lucky enough to escape to Africa, India or the Gulf following their trading connections and ac-quiring education in the days of Sultan Said bin Taimur, when opportunities at home were limited. But they fully recognize and respect those who stayed behind to tend their berds and fish the seas.

As an economic adviser put it: "The people of Oman have a generous nature and a com-plete lack of arrogance. Those who left during

This pride in the past and the character of the people is revealed in the government's con-cern to modernize methods of food production without wiping out the traditional way of life of farming and fishing communities but rather giving them a helping hand to play a full role in development in partnership with the expert and technocrat. Quarter to mineral-loaded mountain ranges, fertile valleys and a long coastline teeming with 1,000 varieties of edible fish. Oil and gas, plentiful although not abundant, are the icing on a potentially very rich cake. The curse of Oman's location is that it stands exposed on the southwest corner of the Arabian Peninsula, Every 15 minutes, a tanker passes through Oman's territorial waters in the narrow Strait of Hormuz carrying crude oil to the Western industrial world. While the West-ern world is worried about the threat to what it calls in the interact. Once in left minutes, left it calls its vital interests, Oman is left virtually alone to face the possibility of external threat

To defend the Strait of Hormuz would be a sufficient headache for any developing nation whose greatest need is for roads, hospitals and factories, not for guns and rockets. But Oman is doubly cursed for on its western flank sits South Yemen, an Arab state that the Omanis see as a Communist outpost threatening Oman as well as the Red Sea.

Oil Industry

A less determined nation and a less self-assured ruler might crumble under the pressure. Not so Sultan Qaboos. While he seeks to solve Oman's defense problems in the framework of the Arab and Gulf states, he is trying to ensure. Oman's freedom of choice and action.

An example of that spirit of independence is Oman's attitude toward its oil industry. Like its oeighbors, Oman is dependent in the short. term and for its development on oil revenues.<sup>2</sup> Considering the size of the country and popu-lation, its oil revenues are small compared, with those of its extremely wealthy neighbors. More than any of them, it depends for its econt oomic plans on a stable income. Having achieved a production of 330,000 barrels a day through extensive explorations in recent years, Oman cannot afford the luxury enjoyed by other states of cutting production to preserve prices. Yet despite its dependence on oil, Oman has never joined the Organization of-Petroleum Exporting Countries nor its Arab.

an outstanding external debt of about $481 million in 1979.

The government of Oman did not panic but held to its development program, knowing that to delay infrastructural projects would only entail more expenses and further hamper the expansion of the private sector economy.

Industrial Projects

To deal with the balance-of-payments problens and service debts, Oman put money and effort into an intensive search to discover new oil resources and boost production back to the 1976 levels, while laying down plans for indus-tries that would reduce costly but vital im-ports. These included the Sohar Copper Project, an oil refinery being built by Hyundai at Mina Fahal to avoid importing gasoline and other refined products, a 600,000-ton-a-year cement plant at Rusail, with a second private sector cement project in Raysut in the southern province, and a large industrial estate fully equipped for private sector use at Rusail, Many of these projects will go on stream dur-ing the coming two years.

Meanwhile, dramatic increases in the price of crude oil exports coupled with increased production since last year has allowed Oman

Special to the IHT

OMAN'S development, like that of its Gulf neighbors, is almost totally dependent on oil. Oil revenues will provide 86 percent of the Second Five-Year Plan budget allocation of $21.3 billion. Of that total, $6 billion is allocated for development expenditure aiming at creating an economic and social infrastructure and diversifying sources of national income. Without oil revenues to pay for essential de-velopment, Oman's future would be bleak. Yet, as Oman embarked on its first develop-nent plan in 1975, a shock was in store. Oil production peaked in 1976 at 133.8 million barrels and thereafter began declining. Rather than accepting the inevitable, however, the government decided to put its money into a renewed search for oil reserves and for further means of boosting production from existing wells. Both schemes paid off handsomely, and Oman is now on target for production levels of 330,000 barrels a day throughout the five-year plan that runs to 1985.

Oil exploration began in Oman as long ago as 1925, when a concession was granted to the

The Tourism Factor

By Penny A. Hopkinson

By Penny A. Hopkinson BACK in the mid-1970s, few people had heard of Oman, let alone visited the sultanate. Only a handful of the many thousands of businessmen visiting the Gulf states even considered the value of potential contracts. There were two major reasons. First, expendi-tures on contracts were not commensurate with the allocations from other oil-rich na-tions. Second, there were too many problems in processing the entry documents and this tended to deflect interest. Oman was often last on the schedule and even then there was no certainty that the documents would be processed in time. One feels that it is still something of a privilege to be able to visit this charming country. Gaining access still is not easy but things have improved considerably during the last few years. The position is complicated because visas or No Objection Certificates are not normally obtainable through the Omani consulates abroad. Visas are required for all foreign visitors, and applicants with connections in the sultanate must obtain a letter. Tom the firm or government department they wish to visit with full particulars. Although if you were to shop around, you could bring a tourist-class ticket down to about $900, there is still the relatively high cost of a week's accommodation at about $500 to consider. Up to now, no one has worked out a total package.

Processing Tupe

It is normal for the actual No Objection Certificate to be sent to Seeb International Airport, where the visa is issued, although it is not advisable to arrive without knowing the number and date of issue. Six weeks should be allowed for processing. The simation is ensing, however, and with the exception of November, when many guests are invited to attend the National Day celebrations, visas can be processed more quickly. The Ministry of Commerce and Industry often acts as sponsor to visiting businessmen, and the Ministry of information to foreign journalists.

Try of information to foreign journansis. Oman has now proposed a five-year plan to develop tourism facilities through the Ministry of Commerce and Industry. About $14.4 million has been allocated for the construction of restaurant and rest house complexes throughout the sultanate, a number of which will be built along the 1,500-kilometer route between Muscat in the north and Salalah, Oman's southern area capital. A number of family villas will be built to comple-ment there are visited in Salalah. ment those provided in Salalah.

Visitors will also be able to visit Jebel Akhdar, one of Oman's most beautiful regions.

Visitors will also be able to visit Jebel Akhdar, one of Oman's most beautiful regions, when another road is completed. Additionally, there are plans to provide facilities for tourists at the historic and beautiful places such as Nizwa, Rustaq, Sur and Bahla. "We hope to attract three basic sectors of tourists," said Mohammed Noor Ismail, adviser on tourism at the Ministry of Commerce and Industry. "First, we will attract people from the Gulf area — nationals and residents. Many Middle Eastern nationals do not require entry visas, and it will thus be easier for them to come for a long weekend or short holiday with their families. short holiday with their families.

"The second type of tourist is the stopover passenger. Already, a number of airlines sales managers have asked about the possibility of the ministry sponsoring them for transit visas. Oman is ideally placed for people wishing to break their journey, say, between Europe and the Far East. We are hoping that airlines and hotels will cooperate in producing autable packages at attractive prices for this type of tourist. In fact, we

Late Exports

Despite keen interest in Oman's prospects as an oil producer on the part of international companies, it was not intil 1962 that oil was discovered in commercial quantities, given the low price of oil in those days, and regular ex-ports of crude oil did not begin until Aug. 1, 1967, more than a decade behind the rest of the Gulf states.

This lack of serious effort in oil exploration and production on the part of the companies was one major reason for Oman's backward state (compared with its neighbors) until Sultan Qaboos bin Said came to power, although it was not the sole factor. Most of Oman's oil is produced in the north, since by the time production began in earnest the rebellion in the southern region effectively prevented any exploration taking place even though prospects for oil in the Mar-mul region were known to be good. But with the end of the rebellion in 1975 and the urgent need to find new resources in order to main-tain production levels, the government, which had taken a 60-percent shareholding in Petrohad taken a 60-percent shareholding in Petro-leum Development Oman, in partnership with Royal Dutch/Shell (34 percent), Compagnie Francaise des Petroles (4 percent) and Partex (2 percent), signed a long-term agreement with its partners for the development of the south-ern oil fields. The government's program for the development had an allocation of $380 prillion of $380 million, of which the Abu Dhabi Fund for Economic Development contributed $170 million in 1978.

After the agreement was signed, new oil fields were discovered with great frequency during the next two years, and as prices of crude oil soared toward $40, fields once thought uneconomical by the oil majors had become commercially viable prospects. As of January, 1981, Oman's total oil reserves stand at an estimated 2.5 billion barrels, with the southern fields representing half a billion bar-rels and more finds expected. Crude from southern wells is of varying types, ranging from viscous heavy in Marmul to light crude at Birba and Samha.

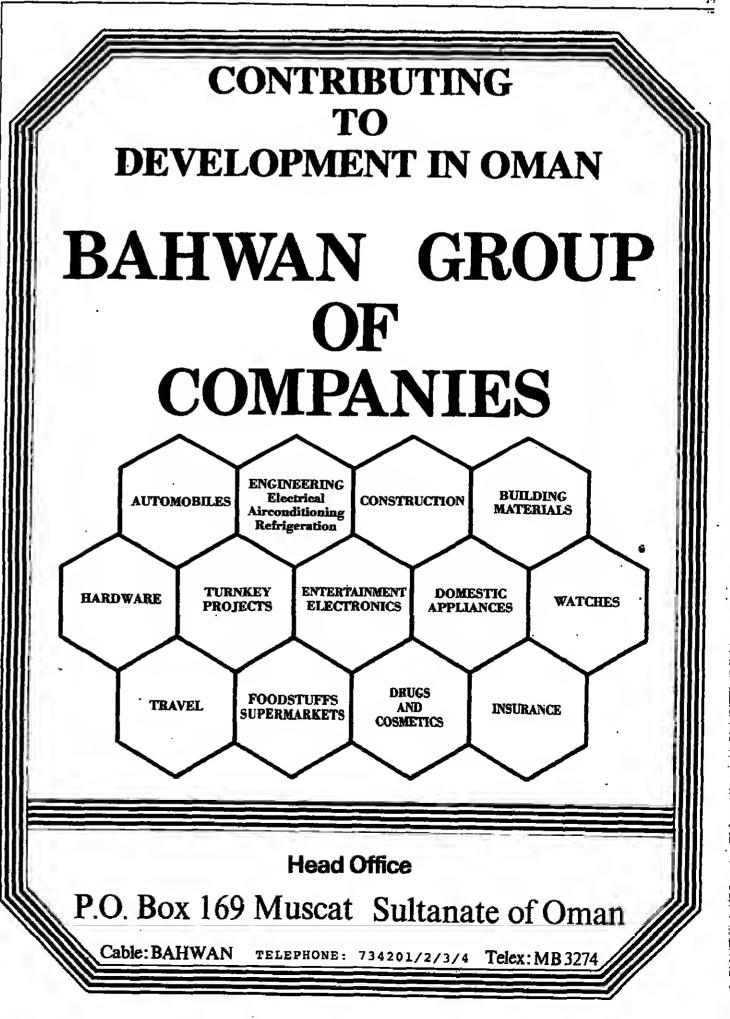

The southern fields went on stream in November, 1980, and production from the region averages 70,000 barrels a day. In the northern fields, new techniques of water and gas injec-tion are enabling production levels to be main-tained. Petroleum Development Oman, which became an Omani-registered company on May 31, 1980, produces the bulk of Oman's oil exports. But a consortium of Elf-Aquitaine-Sumports, but a consortunit of cut-Aquitaine-sur-itomo-Wintershall operates the Samha field near the Saudi border. This field began pro-duction at the end of last year and is running at 12,000 barrels a day of exceptionally highquality light crude, which is pumped to Mina Fahal and blended with heavier PDO crudes on a production-sharing basis.

A number of other international companies are engaged in exploration in other areas, and the success of the Elf group in a hitherto un-tapped area has raised hopes of further finds. While all of Oman's existing wells are on shore, international groups have taken up offshore concessions in the Mussandan region, the Sohar region and near the Kuria Muria islands.

In addition to oil, which should be sufficient fair distribution.

B<sup>Y</sup> a freak of nature every sum-mer, the Indian monsoon rains drench a small corner of southern Oman. The perimeters of the downfall can be marked with precision. On one side of the line there is dry arid desert and on the other, for a brief period, the land is carpeted with lush green vegetation. This is Dhofar with its banana trees, coconut palms and herds of mountain cattle. It is one of the oddities of the Arabian Peninsula that gives Oman its distinctive character and its hope for the future.

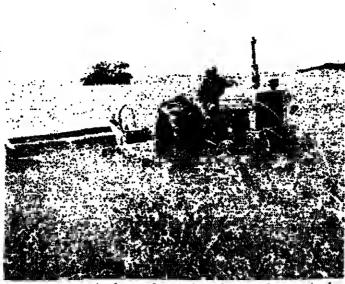

A highly developed system of tribal ownership of water holes ensures that meager resources are protected. This system is just one of the examples in the varying geographical regions of how man has found a way to live in harmony with his natural surroundings, a fact that has not been lost on Oman's planning experts as they seek to boost agriculture, animal husbandry and the fishing industry to feed the nation and eventually gain revenues from exports.

The agricultural potential of Oman is enormous because the land, given sufficient water, is extremely fertile. Again, this is no new discovery. Centuries ago, when the Persian empire gained control over Oman, it began to establish the falaj irrigation systems, man-made canals designed to use gravity to bring water to cultivable

About 4,000 nf these ancient canals have been discovered. Most are dilapidated beyond repair, hav-ing been neglected during Oman's dark ages prior to the accession of Sultan Qaboos bin Said. It is a heartening sight to find boys at summer camps busy clearing and reactivating the canals in vital regions - an example of the selfhelp programs encouraged by the Ministry of Agriculture and Fish-eries in the rural areas.

Water is the key to Oman's agri-cultural plans and in the current five-year plan, $37 million is allocated to the Public Authority for Water Resources for surveying and developing water resources in the interior of the country. Help will be given to reactivate the falaj systems, which are normally privately owned on a sharing basis by groups of villagers. Drilling prorams will investigate potential onderground water reserves. Water table levels will be scientifically studied to ensure that the increasing use of water.pumps by farmers does not irreparably damage existing resources

One other important project is to find effective ways of prevent-ing the loss of water to the sea. Planners estimate that agriculture in northern Oman uses 188 million cubic meters of water a year, while 162 million cubic meters is lost in seepage to the sea. Recharge and flood-control dams are envisaged as the best way to capture and recycle at least one-third of the loss. Providing water is the government's concern, but in most aspects of agricultural development. according to Dr. Alam el Hoda Hammad, director of planning at

At the top end of the scale, major fisheries projects have been es-tablished at Mutrah in the capital regioo and at Salalah. These include cold stores, freezers, ice plants and other necessary facilities. Marine workshops have been set up at fishing centers around Oman's coasts where fishermen can repair their engines with expert advice.

Last year, the Oman National Fishing Co. was established to persuade private sector investments to become involved in the fishing industry as a major contribution toward long-term development, Under the current five-year plan, the Oman Bank for Agriculture and Fisheries has been established with initial capital of $56 million to provide soft finance for private sector projects. A whole range of further incentives is being provid-

These projects are being careful-ly controlled to avoid hurting the traditional fisherman, who, said Dr. Hammad, has proved to be, along with the farmer, the back-bone of the nation, perservering through the dark days when others left the country to seek better op-portunities abroad.

Government Subsidy

Since 1976, the government has been helping fishermen to help themselves through the Fund for Encouragement of the Fisherman The government has provided fishermen with more than 2,000 outboard motors and 500 aluminum boats, since the traditional crafts on which the fishing industry depended - boat build. ing and sail making - are fast disappearing as Oman modernizes

Muttrain market is even used by fishermen driving in from the border areas of the United Arab Emirates as license plates on the pick-ups along the harbor wall testify.

The prospects for production of food, Dr. Hammad said, are encouraging. He believes that, provided the government encourages but does not interfere with private sector investment, Oman will be self-sufficient within a few years. Already Oman has $4,000 hectares under cultivation and by the time the current five-year plan is over that will have increased considera-

Oman, with access to the open sea on two sides, does not make any notice-able impact on the fish stocks. This does not mean that there is no need for caution. Surveys are un-der way of Oman's marine weath and the sultan is most anxious that conservation and environment protection measures are kept high on the list of priorities to ensure that development does not mean destruction.

Much of Oman's success in balancing its books relates to careful planning and a commitment to keep a tight rein on expenditure where necessary. While the govern-ment spends heavily on long-term infrastructural development and social services, it does not go out of its way to protect the marketplace from the rising costs of im-ported goods. #### Dart & Kraft to Sell Glass Division ...

TARV Reuters NORTHBROOK, Ill. - Dart & Kraft said Monday it will sell Thatch-er Glass Manufacturing, a move that is expected to reduce its 1981 earnings by about $1.30 a share.

The company, whose 1980 earnings were $7.03 a share, said the Thatcher division will be sold to a corporation formed by Dominick & Dominick for $120 million in cash and $20 million in securities. It said the unit had 1980 operating profit of $30.4 million on sales of $344.7 million.

The corporation purchasing the division is owned partially by Thatcher senior officers and current management will continue to operate the unit, Dart & Kraft said.

Statoil, Swedes to Study Gas Pipeline

From Agency Dispatches

OSLO - Statoil, the Norwegian state oil company, said Monday it has agreed with Vattenfall, a state-owned Swedish energy concern, to study the feasibility of constructing a pipeline to transport natural gas to the European continent.

Statoil spokesman Willy Olsen said the joint study of technical and economic aspects of building a pipeline from northern Norway, where natural gas has been found, through Sweden to Western Europe would be completed by July 1, 1983. Statoil also told customers that it would raise by $1.50 a barrel the

The company said the unresolved votes can decide the outcome. Penn Central said that the independent judges of election cautioned that these preliminary results "are in no way to be considered as final."

Siemens to Cut Work Force by 5%

Renters

BONN - Declining short-term orders will force Siemens to reduce its work force by around 5 percent by the end of September, 1982, mainly through attrition, a company spokesman said Monday. The spokesman added that despite an increase of nearly 15 percent in incoming orders in the nine months ended September 30, the proportion of short-term orders is falling. Siemens employs 338,000 persons worldwide, 230,000 in West Germany, and the reduction will apply across the board, he said. No details were given of how the measures will affect specific plants or what the cost will be.

ANZ Announces 1-for-5 Bonus Stock Split

Renters

MELBOURNE - The Australia and New Zealand Banking Group said Monday it will make a one-for-five bonus stock issue following a 29 percent increase in 1980-81 earnings.

It attributed the higher earnings to improved returns from retail banking operations throughout its Australian and overseas network and from its finance company subsidiaries. The new shares will rank equally and will qualify for the final 1980-81 dividend of 14 cents a share. ANZ said it expects to be able to maintain the current annual dividend of 28 cents a share.

After adjustment for inflation and financing discounts, the average price of existing homes has fallen 10 percent in the last 12 months, the steepest drop since the Depression.

To be sure, the recent decline in the inflation-adjusted price of homes is insignificant compared with the substantial appreciation many homeowners have built up during the past decade, when average pric-

The decline of home prices is likely to persist as long as interest rates remain high, said Kevin Villani, acting deputy assistant secretary for economic affairs at the Department of Housing and Urban lopment

"Today's high cost of mortgage money has squeezed out the home price appreciation that we saw during the previous decade by making it difficult for many people to pay the current cost of a bouse," Mr. Kerin of the Realtor's association said.

Cooling Off

The cooling off of the housing boom, however, does not mean bomes have become bad investments. They should still appreciate steadily in value in the coming decadee, expectts say, hut not at the previous rates.

AT&T Seeks Dismissal of Suit by MCI

By Merrill Brown Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON --- Attomeys for American Telephone & Telegraph are pressing for dismissal of a $3 billion antitrust suit brought here against the Bell System by MCI Communications.

The suit is similar to a case tried in Chicago last year that resulted in a record $1.8 billion verdict against AT&T. But the suit here covers MCI allegations against AT&T since 1975, while the Chicago case cut off at that point.

Little action has taken place in the second suit, in which MCI is seeking $1 billion damages, tripled to $3 billion under antitrust law. The complex discovery process, in which each company reviews the others' documents, has yet to begin, and trial is unlikely to start even next year. In both cases, MCI charges AT&T with illegally monopolizing the long distance telephone busine

But in oral arguments on dismissing the second case last week, AT&T attorney George Saunders said the point AT&T is raising about the second suit "goes to the heart of this country's judi-cial system." If this case is tried, there is "no reason it [MCI] cannot do it again two years from now in another court."

Chester Kamin, an attorney for MCI, said that even the resolution of the Chicago suit, now before an appeals court, "could not in any way preclude" action in the Washington case. The judge did not say when he would rule on AT&T's motion to dismiss the suit.

The complex court battles between the two companies date to March, 1974, when MCI filed its suit in Chicago. MCI decided the following year to seek damages only for the period ending with April, 1975.

But on April 30, 1979, MCI filed a second antitrust suit against AT&T and against the nation's independent telephone companies charging anticompetitive acts since May, 1975.

Meanwhile, the suit in Chicago continued, and in June, 1980, a jury awarded MCI $1,8 billion in damages, considered the largest damage award in antitrust annals. AT&T appealed the decision, and both companies expect a decision by the end of the year.

OPEC Unit Is Said To Plan Meeting

The Associated Press

VIENNA - The OPEC longterm oil strategy committee will ey me and Shinking and Sunday in Vi-enna, the Austrian press, agency said Monday, OPEC information officials could not be reached for Australia

By John Koten AP-Dow Jones DETROIT - The big three U.S. automak-

ers no longer are counting on a significant recovery in the U.S. auto market next year.

Disappointed in autumn car sales and pes simistic about the ontlook for the national economy, the major automakers have slashed their 1982 forecasts. While only a few months ago they were predicting that sales could reach a healthy 10.5 million units next year, they are currently bracing for only modest improvement from the expected 8.7 million this year.

Sources said the companies' new internal projections put 1982 new car sales at be-tween 9 million and 9.6 million units. The figures include sales of both domestically built and imported autos.

The possibility of a third consecutive year of depressed industry sales means auto com-panies probably will need further cuts in operations to avoid more big deficits. There was some evidence of that last week - General Motors and Ford announced production cutbacks at U.S. operations.

Auto sales analysts have been re-evaluating their 1982 forecasts in light of surprising-ly slow business volume at new-car showrooms in the past month or so. Sales in Octo-ber plunged to the lowest levels since November, 1971.

The analysis got another jolt Friday, after the industry finished tabulating sales for the first 10 days of November. Total deliveries of U.S.-built cars dropped 13 percent in the period, to 141.243 units from 163,002 units a year earlier. Including imports, this sales pace was equal to about 8.1 million units anmually.

"The sales rate at the beginning of this month is a good indication of where we are going to be for a while," one sales analyst said. "The industry is going to creep along at this rate until the economy starts to show some life."

Sources said Ford is budgeting for industry sales of only 9 million cars next year, making it the least optimistic of the big three. Only a month ago, Ford was project-ing 1982 sales of 9.9 million units.

ohn Deaver, Ford's chief economist, declined to confirm the new forecast. While acknowledging that the company is reassessing the outlook for next year, he said his staff still has not arrived at a final number. But he said it is possible sales could go as low as 9 million in 1982. "All the economic news is negative," he said

U.S. Automakers Forced to Lower Expectations for 1982 [Ford will close 12 of its assembly plants the week of Jan. 4 to balance inventories, Renters quoted Automotive News as saying

Monday. The closings will be a continuation of the 11-day Christmas holiday down-time.] General Motors is slightly more cheery than Ford, predicting sales next year of at least 9.6 million new cars, sources close to the company said. The No. 1 antomaker also has what it calls a "high track" forecast showing the best possible case for next year, that forecast puts 1982 sales at 10.1 million mits

GM Chairman Roger Smith has refused so far to follow the company's usual custom of announcing an official sales forecast each fall. He said high interest rates make the outlook too uncertain

Chrysler already has revised its 1982 forecast twice this fall and corrently is predicting that total sales next year will reach 9.5 mil-lion units. But sources said the company is considering lowering its forecast even further.

Previously, antomakers hoped sales would begin a long upbill climb beginning this fall. But they now think sales could remain around current levels for 12 months before picking up significantly.

Weidenbaum Gloomy on Jobs, But Predicts Turnaround

From Agency Dispatches WASHINGTON - In his most pessimistic prediction yet, Presi-dent Reagan's chief economic adviser has said that he expects the unemployment rate to climb "well over" the current 8 percent. Murray L. Weidenbaum, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, conceded that partly as a result of the government's fight on inflation, unemployment might hit 9 percent, as high as it has been ce World War IL

Unemployment rose to 8 per-cent in October, leaving 8.5 million people out of work. A rise to 9 per-cent would mean another 1 million nnen

And, in yet another indication of economic stagnation, the Feder-Reserve Board said Monday that U.S. factories operated at a seasonally adjusted 76.9 percent in October, the lowest level since 76.7 percent in September, 1980.

But in an appearance Sunday on CBS-TV, Mr. Weidenbaum predicted a major economic turna-round in 1982.

"The second half of 1982 will not only be a period of expansion but one of the most vigorous periods of economic growth in recent years," he said.

Only 19 percent believed conditions are favorable for buying a house, down from 39 percent a year carlier, and only 50 percent thought it was a good time to buy a car, said Richard T. Curtin, who directed the survey for the univer-sity's Institute for Social Research. Although interest rates are cas-ing, "more favorable employment and real income trends are needed before sustained growth in housing and vehicle sales can be expected, said Mr. Cortin. "An increased reluctance to use savings to incur new debt was recorded," Mr. Curtin said.

Italian Named as Central Figure in Probe Of Suspected Inside Trading on St. Joe Bid

By Tim Carrington AP-Dow Jones

NEW YORK - An Italian investor with strong ties in the U.S. financial community is the focus of the insider trading probe involving St. Joe Minerals, according to sources close to the investipation.

The Securities and Exchange Commission charged last March that investors reaped illegal profits in St. Joe stock and options by buying on the inside knowledge that Jos. A. Seagram & Sons was planning a takeover bid.

BOOKS RED DRAGON By Thomas Harris. 348 pp. $13.95. G. P. Putnam's Sons, 200 Madison Avenue, N.Y. 10016.

balistic id-creature who lives inside him, is probably the best popular novel to be published in the United States since "The God-father."

As a veteran of the blurb-wars, I As a veteran of the burro-wars, i know that this is perhaps as far as Harris' publisher's will read. You may see the "quota," as publishing people call the pithy little statement above, in ads for the book, cut down to a pun-chy minimum. "THE BEST POPU-LAR NOVEL TO BE PUBLISHED IN THE UNITED STATES SINCE "THE GOD- FATHER!" " With my name or the newspaper's name or both beneath it.

Such a "quote" will probably sell a pumber of books. Serious critics, how-ever, will cock an cycbrow, sigh, and move on to the new Barth or Barthehne. But "Red Dragon" raises an important — perhaps crucial — point about the role popular literature plays in the artistic life of a country so welleducated that almost everyone reads something. Edmund Wilson located the mind-set of the "serious" critic (who only criticizes "serious" literature, natch) more than 40 years ago, when he wrote an essay titled "Who Cares Who Killed Roger Ackroyd?" The stance hasn't changed in the inter- vening years; even now some-one may well be composing an essay which could be titled "Who Cares If Will Graham Catches the Red Dragon?"

Mere Thriller

The book will receive few if any "serious" reviews at all; space in book review supplements is notoriously lim-ited, and why give column inches for a mere thriller? But it's a pity, because the best popular fiction can combine art with nearly devastating insights into The Way We Live Now ... and if you don't believe it's true, read Wilkie Collins. He ain't no Dickens, but he holds up amazingly well, and tells us things about Victorian England that are as entertaining as they are invaluable

"Red Dragon" summons to mind the best of James M. Cain, both in terms of the way the plot is cast and in those of the writing, which has the ferocious focus of the clean white light. Badly written popular novels sometimes work for me if the plot ---the story — works in a new and fresh way: "Jaws" worked for me on precisely this level. But as important as story is, it can never replace that quality of writing which allows the reader to feel as if he has slipped into the driver's seat of a Rolls-Royce, where everything is muted and every-thing works. Harris has it all working here; the prose ticks in such perfect time that the reader is amazed with, delight.

"Graham had a lot of trouble with taste," he writes of the retired man-hunter who is tagged to hunt down the homicidal Francis Dolathyde. "Often his thoughts were not tasty. There were no effective partitions in CER ED DRAGON," Thomas pel in the hand of a high-priced sur-path in the grip of the canni-in the eye of the beholder, because all sentimentality has been stripped away.

wirns Ei

If we call "Red Dragon" a suspense novel, then it also owes its debt to Cain there, because Cain more than anyone else created the genre, allow-ing us to know who the killer was ing us to know who the knor was, blurring the line between the "mys-tery" novel and the "straight" novel. Dolarhyde, a grandmother-addled psychopath (Granny once threatened to cut off his peaks for wetting the bed), has killed two eather families in the South. He works for a film develthe South. He works for a run deve-oping company and has picked his victims by viewing home movies tent in for processing. The man chargad with hunting him down is Will Graham, who has an uncanny ability to think like a psychopath (previous to Dolar- hyde, he had been charged to Dolar-hyde, he had been charged with catching a mass murdener named Hannibal Lecter, dubbed "Hannibal the Cannibal" by the tabloid press) and who pays for it. Oh boy, does he pay for it. The book describes their duel, and with his clean eye for prose and his impeccable choice of detail, Harris pumps an unbelievable amount of suspense into his narrative.

The book has its flaws (this is the inc book has its liaws (this is the part you never read in any hint); one admires Harris' research into police and forensic technique, but one finds it impossible to believe that the FBI can operate with such technocratic excan operate with such inclusion er-pertise — one doesn't doubt that they have the equipment, you indetstand, but just that such agents as Jack Crawford, who hanls Graham back into the game, exist. Reba McClane, the female lead, is a little too much like "the world's champion blind lady" in Frederick Knott's play."Wait Until Dark." I was a lot more interested in Will Graham's good wife Molly.

But none of this negates the novel's raw, grisly power or its inescapable picture of a society which is on the verge of drowning in nonsensical vio-lence; it does not negato Harris' delineation of Dolarhyde, the psycholic "human monster" who uses his grand-mother's false teeth to bite his victims. Like the best popular fiction, the book simply comes at you and comes at you, finally leaving you shaken and sober and afraid on a deeper level than simple "thrills" alone furnish.

"Serious" critics may dislike it for wa. Edmont its sales potential (probably im-mense), for the movie that will undoubtedly follow, and for the accessibility of its linear plot. But most read-ers will respond, I think, to what Harris has done so well and so honor-ably there — they will respond to these two hannted men, Will Graham these two hamted men, Will Graham and Francis Dolarhyde, and to the Red Dragon which rises between them, so powerful and yet so irration-al. As readers responded to Wilkie Collins' cogent picture of Victorian England in novels which were the forerunners of today's romans policiers, so I think they will respond to Harris' vision of a world where a mad-

BASIC rule of bidding, belong in A Lesson three of a beginners course, is regularly fractured, for no good reason, by a very high percent-age of relatively experienced players. It is this: Never rebid a five-card suit unless partner has indicated some support. An exception occurs when the suit is a secondary one. Experts may find others, DD rare occasions, but lesser players should stick strictly to the rule, with the exception stated, and will be right 99 percent of the time.

One danger of rebidding a five-card suit, as opener or responder, is that your partner will assume you have at least six. Another is the possibility that the bidding will die, leaving you with the inadequate trump holding the combined hands.

Even when the player who rebids a five-card suit is lucky enough to find a few trumps in the opposite hand, the gods may punish him for his inferior bidding. They did so on the di-agramed deal. agramed deal.

East had a difficult bid when the opponents bid both red suits. He might have made a takeout double. but he chose one no-trump, an action that promises sound values when made in this "sandwich" position. With no additional values and a misfit in hearts, South should certainly have passed. He chose instead to bid two diamonds, breaking the rule. East now doubled to show massive defensive strength and the auction ended.

South was lucky to find three trumps in the dummy ---- one or two would have been a normal allotment. He was unlucky to run into a bot de-fense by East-West.

The opening lead of the club nine was ducked around to South's king. He led the diamond king, a slight error, and East won with the ace and à.

for a duck. But West played the six to signal an even number of cards and East correctly took his ace. He knew that South would have raised hearts sooner or later with queen x-x. East shifted to the spade queen and South seized the opportunity to take his king. This was another deli-cate error: he would have done better to let East lead again. South now exited with a spade, and West was able to wip with the nine, gaining the lead she wanted so badly. She led her remaining trump to stop a spade ruff in dummy, and East discarded his spade acc. Without that discard, East would have been subject to an end play. As it was, South was left with four-mayoidable black-suit losers, and the defense.

The Saints were held to 119 yards rushing, 98 of them on 31 carries by running back George Rogers. Rookie quarterback Dave Wilson, again filling in for the ail-ing Archie Manning, completed 19 of 39 passes for 244 yards but threw two interceptions.

The Real Story Behind The Libyan Connection

WASHINGTON — As a read-er of spy thrillers. I have been following the CIA-Libyan Connection with a great deal of interest. It appears there are these two ex-agents named Frank Terpil and Edward Wilson who have a contract with Col. Qadhafi to train terrorists, organize assassinations.

hire American pi-lois and ex-Green Beret types, and procure all sorts of lethal weapons which will help OJ. Qadhafi knock off his enemies. Now you may wonder why two Americans, who 100 18 served their coun-Buchwald try. would go over to the other side to help a madman who runs one of the most heinous governments in the world.

Well, if you read thrillers the way I do, then you'll pobably buy the answer, Wilson and Terpil really still work for the CIA. But in order not to blow their cover, they keep devising ways to knock off U.S. diplomats.

"The Company" has known for a long time what the two men are up to particularly when it comes to buying material in the United States to further the cause of world terrorism.

The two turncoais also bave been permitted to recruit mercenaries in the United States while the U.S. has looked the other way. to convince Col. Qadhafi that they are on his side.

Unbeknownst to the CIA. Terpil and Wilson were photographed hy the KGB in a compromising situation in a Tripoli botel room, and the Soviets turned them around so they would work for them. The Russians don't trust Qadhafi any more than the Americans do, and threatened to release photographs of the two men to the National Enquirer unless they became double agents, which both men agreed to

What the KGB doesn't know is that the real Terpil and Wilson were spirited off to Israel and replaced with two Israeli intelligence agents pretending to be Terpil and Wilson, but actually reporting on Qadhafi's activities to Tel Aviv through a Swiss company that Mossad bas set up.

The French found out about this and that's how they managed to get the Libyans to pull out of Chad. Terpil and Wilson advised Qadhafi to give up in Chad, be cause they said they couldn't supply him with any more planes from the United States.

British Intelligence, which is not sure what game the CIA is playing, has planted on Terpil a beautiful Italian countess who will do anything to avenge the murder of her father by Qadhafi. Egyptian agents have offered Wilson $1 million in an American tax-free All-Savers account, if be will push Qadhafi out of an air-plane at 35,000 fer

In order to prove his loyalty to Qadhafi. Wilson reported the offer to the colonel, which has made Qadhafi believe more in Wilson and Terpil than he ever did.

The higgest problem Terpil and Wilson bave at the moment is to keep Libya from building an atomic bomb in Pakistan.

The CIA has supplied the two men with blueprints of the Three Mile Island nuclear plant, and if the Pakistanis follow the plans, the bomb will blow up in their faces. * * *

Now I know there are a few peo-ple out there who believe that this scenario is farfetched, but it's the only one that makes any sense. Otherwise, you have to ask yourself wby would the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency, which has terminated many of its enemies for far less, permit two of its ex-agents to organize a worldwide terrorist network, and supply them with weapons and American pilots and ex-Green Berets.

I'm sticking with my theory until a better one comes along. If I were in Qadhafi's place, I would bury both Frank Terpil and Edward Wilson in bot sand up to their necks, and let red ants have a go at them until they tell the real reason why they're so anxious to belp Libya become the terrorist capital of the world. ©1981. Los Angeles Times Syndicate

Theater Group in France Has a Ball

INTERNATIONAL HERALD TRIBUNE, TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 17, 1981

By Joel Stratte-McClure nal Herald Tribun DARIS - There are few places

A as potentially creative, em-barrassing or sweaty as a dance floor. Putting the two sexes to-gether in a ballroom or near a bandstand — for an afternoon the dansant in the 1930s, an outdoor victory celebration on cob-blestones in the '40s or an acrobatic hop in a dark room during the 50s — inevitably has roman-tic, comic or tragic consequences. The social presentation of any dance, with its contradictory elements of liberation and inhihition, produces the best and worst of human plurnage, gymnastics, conversation and relationships. Almost everyone has memories or expectations associated with dancing in public, which is wby "Le Bal" is attracting a diverse audience to a slightly uncomfort-able warehouse-cum-theater in the Paris suburb of Antony. The nonverbal play emotionally por-trays the different social, musical and dance styles that character-ized the French ball from World War II to the late 1960s.

Austere Room

A red-haired woman in a tight leopard-patterned dress with matching purse timidly enters a large, austere room with four tables, nine chairs and three ashtrays. Seven other women, each attired as though it were the last waitz, follow her. They are ner-vous, self-assured, nose-in-the air, severe, flippant, nail-biting, forcefully sensual, scared to death. The men come next, representing the same mixture of social class, fashion and behavior, The participants eye each other warily, provi the dance floor, check their bair and makeup in an imaginary mirror. The music starts - appropriately one tune is "Strangers in the Night" - and the selection process gets under way with airs of acceptance, refusal and feigned boredom.

The afternoon ball is the kind of thing you see today in Paris on Rue de Lappe or at La Coupole, the type of dance that has attracted single men and women for decades. The partners, their expectations tempered by reality. express the spectrum of social and personal emotions as they rhumba, waltz, two-step, fox trot and tango. The music changes

On with the dance: Scene from "Le Bal."

pace, there is some disco. The older men frown, the younger men act like John Travolta, some women are disdainfully reluctant to dance, others do somersaults. The scene shifts to the blare of air raid sirens as the cast, the women wearing white ankle socks, scramble for cover and buddle together. It is the war, the ball suspended. Then bells of libcration are an invitation to the street ball, a chorus line to accordion music and the Paris of Maurice Chevalier. The Americans arrive - gum-chewing, nylon-dispensing soldiers - and introduce swing, boogie woogie, jitter-hug and bebop. The French fe-males slide into their arms, the French men finally imitate them. The late 1940s is punctuated with the cop pop pa da of Dizzy Gil-lespie and Charlie Parker while "Le Bal" proceeds into the era of Saint-Germain-des-Prés. Not a word is spoken. Just the music, the dance and the burnan

the role of a physically deformed dance-goer in the first sketch. "The ball was the action and we wanted to show the evolution of French life, the differences in human character, by depicting the different balls."

Expressive Paporama

The 70 roles in "Le Bal," from the shy Moslem at the Algerian party to the skeptical Frenchman after the Liberation, were origi-nally improvisations by the cast based on interviews, as well as films and photos of the different eras. Director Jean-Claude Pen-chenat has sharpened these characterizations to produce an expressive panorama. Although only three members of the cast were professional dancers when they began conceiving the show in April, 1980, the move through the decades is as realistic as the actual party and its participants.

One of the best moments in the performance occurs during a 1950s rock 'n' roll party when two leathered dancers fight over a woman in slow motion to the nune of "Love Me Tender." An-other highlight is a mock jazz orchestration which almost beckons the onlooker to the dance floor. But the bero of "Le Bal," which has just had its 100th performance, is the unchanging wooden dance floor and the permanently taped music.

"Le Bal" concludes with a disconcerting note, apocalyptic music blended with existentially isolated ballgoers. There is solitude instead of swing, death intude instead of swing, death in-stead of dancing, despair instead of the slim hope of a successful foray to the ball. The audience, ready to dance, is abruptly informed that the music is over,

According to the cast of the Theater du Campagnol, this is the way they saw it when they interviewed old-timers, visited contemporary dance clubs and looked at young people dancing alone in discos. But despite their negative conclusion there is still enough verve at "Le Bal" to re-vive W.H. Auden's dictum: Break down the embraces, dance while you can."

est memories of all the social "Le Bal" is at the Theâtre Firclasses involved dances and balls," said Jean-Francois Permin Gemier, 6 Rue Francois Arago, Antony, until Dec. 13. Tel: 666-02-72. rier, the lanky actor who plays
